To risk serious injury and even death, professional stunts are well compensated daily or weekly. Although the training is rigorous and the working environment may be slightly less than ideal. As with actors and other film technicians, average salaries vary widely. Stuntman BudgetsEach movie has a budget that allocates a certain amount for stunt work. The basic job of double stunts is to take physical risks that the producer doesn't want the lead actors to take. It's a financial calculation: harming a potential movie client or supporting a cast member can cause costly restraint and, in some cases, forcing the director to shoot with a member or alternative script. Although some actors insist on doing their own stunts, the final decision rests with the producer. They are the person responsible for avoiding budget and production delays, and who can buy some insurance against these problems by hiring a double stunt. Stunt Double Job RequirementsStunt Doubles can negotiate daily and weekly fees to take falls, engaging in sword fights, driving cars in chases and staged accidents and using high wires and harnesses. The fee varies Experience and double stunt skill, stunt risk and movie budget. The average annual salary ranges from $62,000 to $70,000 for a double stunt, but the figure will vary greatly depending on the experience and availability of work. Some stuntmen can make over $100,000 or even around $250,000, but that's not as common. Double Stunt Rates and Considerations belong to the Screen Actors Guild, a theater workers' union that sets minimum day and weekly rates for stunt work. In 2014, the daily minimum had reached $899 -- which is the same amount for a stunt coordinator -- and the weekly rate is about $3,200. Three-day lows exist for television-only contracts at a rate of $2,347 for a half-hour or hour show, and $2,556 for a longer show. Some double stunts make around $50,000 a movie, but that number has now fallen as some production has moved from Los Angeles to less expensive states. Double Stunt can negotiate a higher fee if production requires a longer or higher risk commitment. Their only labour-related costs are transport, which production could cover in the contract. The stunt team does not buy safety equipment and does not take care of their insurance; each film production buys coverage against accidents and other hazards on the set. The more dangerous the stunts, the higher the premiums; insurers can restrict stunts and insist on the maximum use of safety equipment. Hours and working conditionsThe Screen Actors Guild sets minimum day rates because a film production has no set operating hours. Double stunt must be willing to work from pre-dawn hours to well after dark to get a shot or the right scene. Stunt coordinators prepare the action with meticulous planning, diagrams, special equipment and often grueling rehearsals. Most productions need double stunts to work in different weather conditions and be in excellent physical condition. Training and experience are the key to landing work and better-than-minimal compensation. Compensation.
